Commencement

SPRING SEMESTER 2024

PENN STATE ABINGTON

May 3, 2024

National Anthem

by Francis Scott Key

O say, can you see, by the dawn's early light,
What so proudly we hailed at the twilight's last gleaming;
Whose broad stripes and bright stars, thro' the perilous fight,
O'er the ramparts we watched, were so gallantly streaming?
And the rockets' red glare, the bombs bursting in air
Gave proof thro' the night that our flag was still there.
O say, does that Star-Spangled Banner yet wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave!

Alma Mater

by Fred Lewis Pattee

For the glory of old State, For her founders, strong and great, For the future that we wait, Raise the song, raise the song,

Sing our love and loyalty, Sing our hopes that, bright and free, Rest, O Mother dear, with thee. All with thee, all with thee.

When we stood at childhood's gate, Shapeless in the hands of fate, Thou didst mold us, dear old State, Dear old State, dear old State.

May no act of ours bring shame To one heart that loves thy name, May our lives but swell thy fame, Dear old State, dear old State!

To Our Graduates and Guests

Ceremony Notes

We welcome you to the spring 2024 commencement exercises for the Abington College of The Pennsylvania State University, instituted July 1, 1997. Because of this distinction, the Abington College is permitted to award its own degrees as reflected in this program. Students from other colleges within Penn State may have elected to process at Abington College's commencement, but their diplomas reflect their colleges at University Park or other locations.

Commencement exercises at the various locations of the University were instituted in 1971 for candidates for the associate degree. Candidates for the baccalaureate degree have been able to receive their diplomas at commencement exercises at a location other than University Park since 1976.

As commencement is the solemn but joyful climax of the graduates' years of study, it is an important and meaningful occasion to the University, its students, faculty, and staff. In keeping with this feeling, guests and participants are requested to avoid unnecessary conversation or moving about during the exercises. Only authorized press and University photographers are permitted in the aisles to take pictures while the exercises are in progress. Family and friends of the graduates may take photos during the ceremony but are asked to do so from their seats.

Honors Group

This group is made up of those students who have completed the required number of credits at the University and who are in the top 12 percent of their graduating class in their college. The 12 percent is divided into 2 percent "summa cum laude," 4 percent "magna cum laude," and 6 percent "cum laude." A student's distinction level is determined on the final cumulative grade point average in the semester in which the degree is conferred. Subject to completion of all degree requirements and satisfaction of minimum criteria, distinction may be conferred as indicated upon the individuals listed herein and upon such others as may meet the requirements.

About the Ceremony

Academic Procession

The college marshal, carrying the Penn State Abington College mace, leads the procession, followed by faculty marshals, the student marshals, and the candidates for degrees. These are followed by the faculty and administrative officers. The chancellor and guest speaker enter last. The chancellor wears a medallion, which symbolizes her authority.

The Abington College marshal leads the processional at each Penn State Abington commencement with the ceremonial mace, an Abington College treasure. The unique design of the mace incorporates cherry wood from a tree on campus, a spindle design from the staircase in Sutherland, and an original bronze medal of Chief Ogontz, generously donated to the college by a friend. The mace was financed with funds donated by the Abington College Advisory Board and was a gift to the college in 2004.

Academic Dress

Academic dress had its beginning in the Middle Ages. When the English universities were taking form in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, the scholars were also clerics and adopted robes similar to those of their monastic orders. Caps were a necessity in the drafty buildings, and capes with hoods attached were needed for warmth. The hood was selected by these early scholars as the article to be made distinctive for the various degrees by its color, trimming, and binding. As the universities gradually passed from the control of these ecclesiastics, costumes took on a brighter hue.

The use of academic costume in the United States has been continuous since colonial times. A uniform system was not widespread, however, until about 1895, when the well-defined code of the Intercollegiate Commission was adopted by nearly all institutions of higher learning.

Gowns worn by those in the procession may vary according to the degree held. Although the gown is more frequently black for academic degrees, certain universities have authorized the use of colored gowns. The academic gown usually has pointed sleeves for the bachelor's degree, an oblong sleeve with an arc cut away for the master's degree, and round full sleeves for the doctor's gown, which is faced in front with black velvet and has three bars of the same material across the sleeves—or, in some cases, the color of this velvet relates to the field in which the degree is granted.

Hoods are not usually worn by recipients of the bachelor's degree. The doctor's hood is usually longer than the master's hood and has distinguishing panels. Hoods are often lined with the colors of the school which granted the degree, and the velvet border of the hood indicates the field in which the degree was granted. The standard cap is the mortarboard, usually the color of the gown. Undergraduates wear the tassel on the right side of the cap until the moment the degree is conferred by the chancellor.

Academic honor cords recognize the top 12 percent of baccalaureate degree candidates in each college and at every campus, including associate degree recipients. Students graduating summa cum laude receive blue and white cords, those who are graduating magna cum laude receive blue cords, and those who are graduating cum laude receive white cords.

Undergraduate and graduate students who have honorably served, are serving, or are commissioned to serve in the U.S. military are awarded an honor cord in recognition of their duty and sacrifice. The red, white, and blue cords are given to eligible graduating students, including associate degree recipients, in the following groups: active duty, reserve, and National Guard service members; veterans; and graduates receiving a commission through Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) and official U.S. Armed Forces recruiting programs. Faculty members who meet the eligibility criteria may also receive military honor cords.

About Us

Penn State Abington

The Abington College of the Pennsylvania State University was formerly the site of The Ogontz School and Junior College. In 1950, when the historic girls' school had concluded its 100th academic year, the grounds, original buildings, and library were given to The Pennsylvania State University by the late Abby A. Sutherland, owner and principal.

The new Ogontz Center of Penn State opened in September 1950 with 225 students. An equal number of students continued at the previously established Swarthmore Center, which was discontinued in 1951. In order to better reflect its position in the community, Penn State Ogontz was renamed Penn State Abington-Ogontz in 1995.

Beginning July 1, 1997, upon completion of its forty-sixth academic year, the Abington-Ogontz campus became Penn State Abington College. As a degree-granting college, it continues its commitment to the land-grant concept of providing practical and liberal education in response to the needs of the citizens of the Commonwealth.

Penn State Abington currently enrolls 3,095 students in credit courses, principally from Philadelphia, Montgomery, and Bucks counties, who are served by 157 full-time and 131 part-time faculty members. Both baccalaureate and associate degree programs can be completed through the Abington College.

Penn State University

Chartered in 1855 as the Farmers' High School, Penn State opened in 1859 with a faculty of four teaching sixty-nine students, eleven of whom graduated in 1861. In 1862, Abraham Lincoln signed the Morrill Land-Grant Act, offering each state free public land for a college where "the leading objectives shall be to teach . . . agriculture and the mechanic arts in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes. . . ." Renamed the Agricultural College of Pennsylvania, in 1863 Penn State was designated Pennsylvania's land-grant institution by the Legislature of the Commonwealth. From that beginning, Penn State has grown to be a distinguished university of 88,116 students with a full-time faculty of 6,396 at twenty-four locations and online.

Growth was rapid after the Civil War. In 1871, the first women were admitted. In 1874, the name was changed to the Pennsylvania State College. Curricula were added, the college was reorganized into schools, and new buildings were erected. In 1953, Penn State's name was changed to The Pennsylvania State University in formal recognition of what it long since had become—one of the leading universities of the nation.

As the land-grant institution of Pennsylvania, Penn State has developed a complex of statewide facilities and services to fulfill its mandate to provide education for the citizens of the Commonwealth "at times and places convenient to them." The extensive development of the statewide system of Penn State locations has enabled the University to offer a wide range of needed services—not only to the young, but also to a growing number of adults seeking continuing education.

Major research projects are conducted in each of the academic colleges of the University and its intercollege research institutes, centers, and laboratories. Research and development expenditures totaled $1.239 billion in 2022–2023.

Of the University's living alumni, 395,630 live and work in Pennsylvania. The Penn State Alumni Association—a powerful network of 174,200 members—is the largest dues-paying alumni association in the world.
